As Hiroshi settles into his new dormitory, he is introduced to the peculiarities of living in a shared space. The small, cozy room becomes his sanctuary, a place where he can reflect on his experiences and recharge for the challenges that await him outside.

The Academics and Life at University

Hiroshi's journey continues at one of Japan's prestigious universities. Balancing rigorous coursework and extracurricular activities, he navigates through a sea of textbooks while exploring his passions. From attending thought-provoking lectures to losing track of time at the campus library, Hiroshi immerses himself in the pursuit of knowledge.

Outside of the classroom, Hiroshi joins various student clubs, engaging in cultural and sports activities. Through these clubs, he forges lasting friendships with fellow freshmen who share his interests and aspirations. Together, they embrace the challenges, learn from each other's differences, and create memories that will shape their lives.

Exploring the Land of the Rising Sun

As Hiroshi gains familiarity with his surroundings, he takes every opportunity to explore Japan's diverse landscape. Weekends become an escape from the city's hustle and bustle as he embarks on exciting journeys across the country.

From the sakura-laden streets of Kyoto to the snow-capped peaks of Hokkaido, Hiroshi witnesses the beauty of his homeland. Enchanted by the ancient shrines and temples, he finds solace in their tranquility, seeking moments of reflection and self-discovery.

The Trials and Triumphs

Hiroshi's journey is not without its fair share of challenges. As he progresses through his studies, he faces moments of self-doubt and academic pressure. Yet, it is through these trials that he finds inner strength and resilience, pushing himself beyond limits he once thought impossible.

Additionally, Hiroshi encounters cultural differences as he interacts with people from various backgrounds. However, these encounters provide him with invaluable lessons in tolerance, empathy, and understanding. Through the diversity that he encounters, he becomes a global citizen, broadening his perspective and embracing new horizons.

A Window into the Future

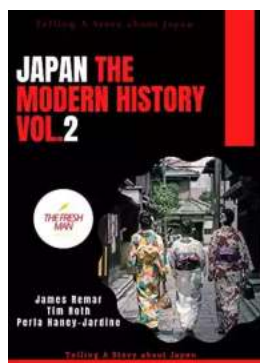

The day finally arrives when Hiroshi dons his graduation robe and holds his diploma with a bright smile. Looking back at his journey, he realizes the transformation he has undergone during his years as a fresh man. The countless hours of study, the sleepless nights of preparation, and the friendships forged along the way have shaped him into a confident, resilient young adult ready to conquer the world.

Hiroshi's story is just one among millions of fresh men who embark on a similar journey in Japan, each with their own unique experiences and aspirations. As we bid farewell to Hiroshi, we are reminded of the incredible power of storytelling and how it allows us to connect with others, to empathize, and to understand cultures different from our own.

Through the story of Hiroshi, we have witnessed the trials and triumphs, the excitement and challenges that fresh men in Japan face. Japan's fresh men embark on a remarkable journey, transforming from uncertain newcomers to confident graduates ready to shape their future.

So the next time you encounter a fresh man's story, take a moment to appreciate the complexity of their experience, and let it inspire you to embrace your own journey, wherever that may be.

In Part II, there will be an analysis of the statements about nationalism in the 1950s. As a foreshadowing, this chapter will outline the relationship between social conditions and speech during this period.

From the perspective of political events, the 1950s are considered to be a decade that began with the issue of peace and ended with a struggle for security.

Regarding the background of this period, two social factors need to be clarified first.

First, in the 1950s, all people in the speech industry experienced wars. This situation continued until the second half of the 1960s, when the generation born after the war began to launch the all-communist movement.

As you can see in the following chapters, the leftist movement in the 1950s often used the term "nation", and ignoring the relevance to the war period could not explain this phenomenon.

Second, the poverty level of Japanese society at that time was polarized in the economic and social fields. The economy that was abandoned by the war did not return to its pre-war level until around 1954. Even though Japan's economy began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 1950s, people's concerns about poverty and polarization still took a long time to completely disappear.

This chapter will focus on these two eras, especially the latter, to give an overview of the leftist nationalism in the 1950s.
