With this book and access to a theatre, you can quickly master the practical process of stage lighting.

The book is arranged sequentially: first, to the hardware - the various pieces of equipment that make up a theatre lighting system. Then, using a model production, there is a step-by-step guide through the process of lighting a play, from the first meeting with the director through to the running of lights during the performance.

Technical detail is kept to a minimum in the main part of the book. However, there is a technical appendix and the principles in this book are fundamental to lighting design in the professional theatre, and will provide a sound basis for further study.

- components of a theatre lighting system
- lighting for acting
- using colour in theatre lights
- developing the design concept
- getting the design on paper
- rigging and focusing lights
- the lighting rehearsal
- the technical rehearsal
- running the show
