YOUR dreams are about to come true, brother! It happened to me. Sure as shootin' it will happen to you. Just like this: On June 29 in the year of our Lord, Nineteen Seventy, a weather-beaten bus pulled up to the base of the Bring Me Men ramp and deposited its scruffy new recruits into the hands of the upper-class cadets. This bus was not one in the fleet of stainless steel, Navy blue, and chrome VanHool busses that the super sergeants in transportation would use to take cadets to the Camp USAFA Airfield in summer, or to the ski slopes of Vail and Breckenridge in winter. Nor were these the midnight blue executive coaches that delivered day laborers to the stadium seven hours before kickoff for football games at Falcon Stadium. This was one of the Blue Bird school busses painted National School Bus Yellow, chrome yellow, BASF #87363. These school busses and drivers were on loan from Palmer and Wasson High schools. A form of 'insurance' to make sure that the high school girls graduating four years from now would have an abundance of future husbands and Cadet Chapel weddings. Unlike the 'yellow school bus dreams' that dropped future cadets off downtown completely naked, this was no dream. In fact, one new recruit was certain that he heard one of the more boisterous ten-foot-tall upper-class cadets announce the beginning of “. . . your worst nightmare, Smack!”The now empty high school yellow school bus closed its folding doors, shifted into low gear, and lurched forward to begin the long trip back to the Broadmoor Hotel to pick up the next load of America’s finest. Just like you buddy, just like you.The Broadmoor Hotel was the unlikely beneficiary of an innocent mistake perpetrated by the Camp USAFA Admissions Office and the unscrupulous Director of Admissions at the Air Force Academy. With the U.S. and coalition forces still reeling from the Tet Offensive and Charlie Kong’s relentless assault on Khe Sanh, volunteerism was at an all-time low.Simon and Garfunkel were still charting #1 with Bridge over Troubled Water, the Canadian band The Guess Who were rocking their RCA contract with American Woman, and B.J. Thomas’ thinly veiled and unobtrusive anti-war song Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head was moving up nicely. The Jewish guy named Norman Greenbaum had put out a groovy little Christian number Spirit in the Sky. Glen Campbell and Jimmy Webb’s Galveston had hit #4 a year ago and was firmly entrenched as the unofficial state song of Texas. It would be years before Galveston would be accused of being an anti-war protest song. Procol Harum’s Whiter Shade of Pale was well on its way to becoming the most played song in history thanks to the mass proliferation of elevators and doctors’ offices.“Men, when you talk with your candidates, parents’ groups, and high school counselors, I want you to tell them ‘they will eat like kings, and they will go first class’ everywhere they travel.” He paused. “Then tell them that fighter pilots are a dime-a-dozen and that we are lookin’ for leaders.” The Admissions Officer scowled as if to say, ‘Do you understand me?’. Liaison Officers nodded like bobble-headed and victorious Kansas City Chiefs replicas following their win over the Vikings in Super Bowl IV that January. Just a month ago.As fast as the Congressional and Vice-Presidential nominations rolled in, parents and guardians made reservations for themselves and their sons at the historical Broadmoor Hotel in Colorado Springs, Colorado for a good night’s rest before reporting for the kind of duty that makes parents and grandparents very proud. The cost? Just $24 bucks a night. But that's when twenty-four bucks was 24 bucks. Was it worth it? Well heck ya. The Broadmoor had a swimming pool and a view of the Will Rogers Shrine. They also had a small pond with motorboats and water skiing. (Short tow ropes of course.) They had a nice golf course.
