1. The Upper Class: Composed of affluent elites who hold significant economic and political power. This class primarily consists of large business owners, high-level government officials, and influential religious figures.
2. The Middle Class: A diverse group encompassing professionals, entrepreneurs, white-collar workers, and educated segments of society. They form a significant portion of the population but face challenges in economic mobility due to various factors.
3. The Working Class: Predominantly comprises of blue-collar workers, including factory workers, laborers, and service industry employees. This class encounters various labor-related issues such as low wages, limited job security, and lack of access to social welfare.

Labor Challenges in Iran

The Iranian labor force represents a crucial component of the country's economy, facing multiple challenges that hinder their growth and well-being. Some of the key labor issues include:

1. Widespread Unemployment

Unemployment rates in Iran fluctuate due to economic factors and government policies. The youth, in particular, struggle to find suitable employment opportunities, leading to frustration and social unrest.

2. Income Inequality

The gap between the rich and the poor continues to widen in Iran. The upper class enjoys luxurious lifestyles while many workers earn meager wages, struggling to meet their basic needs. This income disparity poses significant social challenges.

3. Lack of Labor Rights

The Iranian labor code falls short in providing comprehensive protection for workers' rights. Many workers experience exploitative conditions with no recourse or proper channels to voice their grievances.

4. Limited Unionization

Workers' unions in Iran face significant restrictions, making it challenging for labor collective bargaining and representation. This hampers efforts to improve working conditions and negotiate fair wages.

The Role of Class and Labor Movements

Despite the challenges faced, various class and labor movements have emerged resiliently in Iran, aiming to address the pressing issues. These movements advocate for better labor rights, improved working conditions, and a more equitable distribution of wealth.

Understanding the dynamics of class and labor in Iran is crucial to comprehend the socioeconomic landscape of this vibrant nation. Initiatives to bridge income inequalities, enhance labor rights, and promote social mobility are necessary for a more inclusive and prosperous future for all Iranians.

In the past twenty-five years Iran has experienced a revolution and a turbulent post revolutionary period under an Islamic state that declared itself the government of the oppressed while it struggled to establish a utopian Islamic economy. In this pioneering work Farhad Nomani and Sohrab Behdad provide a comprehensive analysis of the dynamics of change and class configuration in Iranian society. Using a theoretical framework, they map the trajectory of class changes over time, specifically noting the movements between pre revolutionary and post revolutionary Iran. A centerpiece of the book is its analysis of the changes in the pattern of employment of women in the post revolutionary period.

Despite its conceptual and quantitative approach, the book is written in a clear and lucid style, making it accessible to a wide audience. The authors provide a fresh look into Iranian society by exploring the changes in its essential underlying economic structure, and in doing so, the book lays the foundation for comparative studies of social hierarchy of labor in other Middle Eastern countries.
