If he had been a little taller or a slightly better shooter, that skinny forward from the 1979 Punahou High School Hawaii State Championship Basketball team, whose nickname was “Barry O’Bomber,” might have been able to pursue his first career choice, to become a professional basketball player. It seems he just wasn’t good enough to turn pro, so instead that player had to fall back on his second choice, politics. He did pretty well in that field, as Barry O’Bomber – real name Barack Obama – grew up to be President of the United States.

If you’re not a good enough player to make it to the pros and you don’t want to go into politics, you can still earn a living in professional basketball as:

Manager

Coach

Trainer

Player Personnel Director

Referee or Other Official

Announcer

Sales and Marketing Staff

Public Relations and Media Director

Statistician

Agent
