As the weeks roll by and we edge closer and closer to the end of another year, our thoughts inevitably turn to celebration and December is certainly a month for big celebrations! For many people Christmas is at the top of the list and many festivities include large family and community gatherings that involve eating and drinking, exchanging gifts and simply enjoying the company of those we love. Just a few days earlier, the winter solstice is celebrated in the Northern Hemisphere and a few days later, the New Year is welcomed with parties and fireworks across the world, along with hopeful resolutions for better and brighter things to come. People gather at the same time annually across the globe to talk, laugh, sing and have lots of fun. The year is also sprinkled with smaller celebrations like birthdays and anniversaries, each one acknowledged on a specific date with a special meal, a cake and a glass of champagne. A close group of relatives and friends come together to celebrate another milestone in the life of someone they love. And then there are all the very tiny celebrations, the moments of great pleasure that can come with personal accomplishments such as mastering a new recipe, finally finishing a long-term project or even finding the perfect thread. These have no special date, they can happen at any time, and there is no cake, champagne, balloons or fireworks. They don't require any catering or borrowing extra chairs and nobody else even needs to know about them but perhaps they are the most important celebrations, the small victories that bring us joy and carry us forward in our daily lives. Whatever your celebration, large or small, best wishes for a joyous festive season.
