Imagine navigating through turbulent waters while being surrounded by breathtaking landscapes. As you plunge through gushing rapids, you'll catch glimpses of lush green forests, majestic mountains, and pristine villages nestled along the riverbanks. It's an adventure that not only challenges your physical strengths but also immerses you in the raw beauty of Northeast India.

Merging Adventure with Culture

While rafting down the Brahmaputra, you'll also get the opportunity to witness the unique cultural heritage of the region. The river is flanked by various tribal communities, each with its distinct customs, traditions, and folklore. Interact with the locals, savor traditional delicacies, and discover the rich history that envelopes this part of the country.

Experience vibrant tribal dance performances, participate in traditional rituals, and explore the indigenous craftsmanship of the locals. Rafting down the Brahmaputra not only quenches your thirst for adventure but also provides a deep insight into the cultural tapestry of Northeast India.

Planning Your Rafting Expedition

Now that you're eager to embark on this extraordinary adventure, let's discuss the planning aspect. Rafting expeditions on the Brahmaputra are mostly organized between November and March, when water levels are optimal. Numerous tour operators offer customized packages that cater to different skill levels and preferences.

Things to Consider:

- Choose a reliable tour operator: Research and select a well-established rafting operator that prioritizes your safety and provides knowledgeable guides.
- Assess your skill level: Rafting on the Brahmaputra can range from thrilling rapids to calm stretches. Determine your expertise and choose an itinerary accordingly.
- Pack appropriately: Ensure you have the necessary equipment, clothing, and essentials for a comfortable and safe journey.

The Brahmaputra River is one of the last largely free-flowing rivers emanating from the Tibetan Plateau. “This book is the account of “a world record in white water rafting” (The Times of India) down the mighty Brahmaputra River, from Gelling on Indo-Tibet Border to Dhubri on Indo-Bangladesh Border by an Indo-Japanese rafting expedition team under the auspices of Indian Mountaineering Foundation, jointly organised by Himalayan Association of Japan and Indo-Tibetan Border Police. This account has been penned down by the leader of this maiden rafting venture. The mighty river has been rafted down in only 2 small rubberised AVON Rafts, through its unknown deep gorges of boiling white water rapids of Siang valley up to Passighat and thereafter long placid voluminous waters of plains of Assam covering a total distance of about 1300 Kms. in 25 days. The book gives first-hand account of the unexplored tribal area of ‘Abhors’ hills, inhabited by the ‘Adis’—the animist of Arunachal Pradesh and worshippers of ‘Dolo-polo’ (the Sun and Moon God)—and ‘Mishings’ of Assam, which makes it an interesting reading.

This team of adventurers have endeavoured to solve the missing link of the world’s last stronghold and age old riddle of mighty Brahmaputra River by rafting down the unknown gorges and “and slowly forced to divulge its secrets, which could not be explored until this rafting expedition.

The rafting down of Brahmaputra from its Himalayan heights of Tsangpo 'Gorge' used to hold similar challenge to rafters, as climbing of Everest for the mountaineers before it was first climbed in 1953.

So far no book has been published on Brahmaputra River. This study reveals the mystery of the mighty Brahmaputra which was attempted by many expeditions and survey parties in 19th and early 20th century and still remained a challenge.
