The Industrial Revolution in the 18th century further fueled the growth of sport, as it provided people with more leisure time and resources to engage in recreational activities.

The Emergence of Organized Sport:

The late 19th and early 20th centuries witnessed the formalization and organization of sports. This period saw the establishment of sports clubs, governing bodies, and leagues that regulated competitions, standardized rules, and provided a platform for athletes to showcase their skills. The significance of these developments cannot be underestimated, as they laid the foundation for the sports culture and society we know today.

Sport and Media:

The advent of mass media, particularly television and the internet, has revolutionized the way we experience and consume sports. It has made sport more accessible to a global audience, enabling fans from different corners of the world to follow their favorite athletes and teams closely. This increased exposure and coverage have also led to commercialization and the rise of sports as a multi-billion dollar industry.
