They trained us well. Power punctuated our every move, driving fear into the intended target. Who would stand against them?

Braxton Luther, the sellout.

Now a part of the Den, he's determined to make good on Eliza Knight's faith in him—to be more than what he'd settled for when the Party had taken over. But his goal is dangerous, and not just for him. As he searches for a way to protect the silent, invisible victims of the new government, Braxton's mission—which includes finding a way to rescue Eliza from the Reformation Camp—becomes even more complicated. Hannah Knight, Eliza's sister, is simply too much like him.

Tired of standing in her perfect sister's shadow, Hannah determines to find her own place in the world. If that place is with the Pride—the girls' home and training center provided by the Party—so be it. When she leaves the hopelessness of the cellar, that's all she's aiming for. But Quinn Sanger, the handsome son of a powerful political leader, finds her at the creek, and her life takes an unexpected and optimistic turn.

Braxton's convinced Hannah's in trouble. Hannah's convinced Braxton, and all the Uncloaked, are insane. But when they peek behind the real veil the Party maintains, the truth is beyond what either had feared or hoped.

If everyone knew, it could change everything. They redefine their mission. It's time to tear the veil.
