Between two and twenty-six million years ago the state of Florida and surrounding waters went through major changes. Florida used to be twice the size it is now and, at other times, half its current size. During these fluctuations land and sea animals were prevalent, living and dying. There are fossil beads all over world, but nothing quite like Venice, Florida. All sorts of fossilized material can be found diving off the coast, but none are more sought after than shark teeth, especially the 'Meg' tooth. Meg is short for Carcharocles megalodon, the biggest shark to ever roam the oceans. Extinct now, their teeth can still be found all over the world, and you can dive for them right off the beaches of Venice, Florida, the Shark Tooth Capitol of the World! This book is about one man's fascination as a young boy with science and Earth's history, to eventually diving and finding his own meg teeth!
